Notes from the Executive Secretary

TO FFA MEMBERS

BY J. EARL FRICK, JR.

One of the largest delegations on record represented South Carolina at the National FFA Convention in Kansas City, November 13-16, 1991. President George Bush welcomed the group of more than 27,000 SCFFA members and guests to an exciting opening session on Wednesday. A number of FFA members and chapters received national awards and participated in contests to demonstrate skills gained through their studies in agricultural education. Congratulations to the winners, many of whom you will see highlighted in this issue of the magazine. A special thanks and congratulations goes to Patrick Stone, a member from the Johnsonville FFA chapter, who placed second in the National FFA Prepared Public Speaking contest. Patrick successfully completed six eliminations to speak before the National Convention, and brought a lot of pride and recognition to our state. Speaking is just one of many activities that FFA members can demonstrate leadership skills gained through participation in agricultural education and the FFA organization.

FFA members should begin now to complete and submit applications in the contest and awards program. Qualified members can participate in agricultural proficiency awards, the State and American FFA degree program, public speaking, parliamentary procedure and a number of state-sponsored events. Your agriculture education teacher can assist you in determining those awards for which you qualify. Work hard to become the best you can be in your special areas of interest, and participate in the FFA organization to gain recognition for your skills. We plan to see you on the stage at Clemson at the State FFA Convention in June to recognize your efforts.

TO YOUNG FARMERS

BY STEVE WILLIS

The South Carolina Young Farmer Association will hold its 44th annual convention on January 17-18, 1992, at the Sheraton Charleston Hotel in Charleston. The convention will begin with registration at 4:00 p.m. on Friday, followed by a reception, and the production awards banquet begins at 7:00 p.m.

Awards to be presented include the Farm Service Center award, along with Corn, Soybean, Cotton, Livestock, Forest Management, and Energy Efficiency awards. The featured speaker is Morris Jones of Saluda, South Carolina.

Chapter awards and Young Farmer of the Year will be presented Saturday evening. Case IH will also present a tractor to the new State President during this banquet.

The state officer team has arranged for a casino/auction again this year to take place from 9:30 - midnight as entertainment. This was a big hit last year!

The Convention Attendance Award in the amount of $50.00 will go to the chapter with the largest number of Young Farmers attending all sessions of the convention. The score will be counted at one point per person for each session attending, including the banquets, exhibits and luncheons. In addition, so that Young Farmers and their families can enjoy the area and do what they want to do, we purposely put in some free time on Saturday afternoon.

This is the first year in a long while that the convention has been held in Charleston. With Charleston as one of the most historic cities in South Carolina and a reputation of fine food, excellent recreation, and many shops, the executive committee is sure that your visit will be a memorable one. Best of all, the two days provide an excellent opportunity to renew acquaintances and meet new friends. So, Young Farmers, plan to bring the family for a nice weekend at Charleston later this month.

West Oak Hosts Draft Horse Show

These draft horses and visitors were part of the West Oak FFA chapter's second annual "Good Ol' Days" Draft Horse Celebration on November 9. According to advisor Steve Willis, a total of 21 draft animals were on hand to entertain the 1,000 visitors that came to the school. Buggy, wagon and pony rides were offered at no charge to them and demonstrations of plowing, mowing, discing and pulling were on-going all day. The petting zoo of goats, chickens, rabbits, pigs and a small dairy heifer was a favorite attraction for children. Admission to the event is free, but chapter sells food and drinks to raise chapter funds.

February 15-22 is FFA Week

"FFA - Leadership for a Growing Planet" is the theme of National FFA Week next month. According to J. Earl Frick of Columbia, SCFFA Executive Secretary, nearly 5,000 South Carolina members will join in the week's activities.

Nationwide, nearly one-half million Future Farmers celebrate the week-long activities directed toward promoting the aims of agricultural education, the FFA organization, and the great variety of careers available in the subject area.

"We are proud of the FFA and the ideals and leadership it stimulates." He urges chapter advisors and leaders to plan FFA Week programs that emphasize the traditional values of FFA to the school and to the community.

Outdoor billboards and public service announcements for radio and television will highlight statewide activities. Local FFA chapters will sponsor community and school programs.

FFA Week is traditionally observed during the week of George Washington's birthday in respect of his great leadership skills and innovative practices in agriculture.

Owner Williams furnished the materials for the project which took two years to complete. Shown with Chapman are FFA members Hamp Holmes, Bubba Wates, Brandon Glaze and Kelly Thomas. The baler will be used as a promotion for the South Agra Feed and Seed Store in Edgefield.

SCFFA Shares in National Convention

For the 260 SCFFA members who attended, the 64th National FFA Convention in November was a memorable one of addresses. President George Bush addressed the convention on Wednesday afternoon, asking for the FFA's assistance in achieving America's educational goals. On Friday night, Patrick Stone of Johnsonville presented his topic "Genetic Engineering" before a capacity crowd and took second place in the 1991 National Prepared Public Speaking Contest.

According to Hugh P. McClimon, state supervisor of agricultural education, Stone's win was significant. "Stone got South Carolina national recognition for his work. I can't recall anyone placing this high in at least ten years." Stone, a freshman at Clemson University, received a plaque and cash award for his efforts.

Ten Future Farmers received the American FFA Degree. They were Gennie L. Capps, Tyler Epps, Bruce Altman, Scott Everett, Jason Poston, Charles Richardson, Todd Williams, Charles R. Kitchens, Steven B. Shirley, and Gregg Thomas.

Official delegates who served as voting delegates on business to come before the convention were the following state officers: Will Harman, President; Lee Mayfield, Secretary; Terri Williams, Greg Padgett, Tony Pope and Walter Lee High, Vice Presidents. Harman was also the SCFFA flag bearer in the convention ceremonies.

Jimmy Chaplin (front) and James Bush of Beaufort High School assist in digging the water line from the pond to the fish tanks in the greenhouse.

Kolb surveys his new fish tanks at Beaufort-Jasper CEC, the result of last year's aquaculture grant.

Aquaculture Is Part of Beaufort-Jasper Coursework

"We will be ready for our first fingerlings in January," Ag teacher and FFA advisor Jack Kolb explains as he points to his new fish tanks. His program received a grant last year to begin an aquaculture program at Beaufort-Jasper Career Center and the money went into a gravity-fed system of tanks for the fish.

"Our system has 400 gallons of new water pumping from our pond into a holding tank," Kolb explains, "then flowing into the fish tanks and then back to the pond. We'll have about a thousand fish in our tanks by spring."

Kolb is now field testing the aquaculture curriculum in his classes and plans to have his program ready for other schools to visit next year. His final project is to put a surface aerator in the pond later this spring.

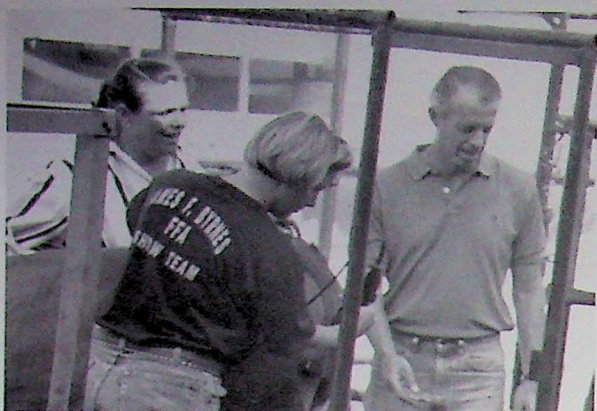

A pipeline connects the pond to the elevated holding tank in the background.

Kolb and his 3-hole golf course attracts visitors to the Beaufort-Jasper Career Education Center, such as this class from Allendale-Fairfax High School. Here FFA advisor Willie Capehart with five students from his new turf management class inspect the course to learn turf maintenance procedures.

Aquaculture students watch as ag teacher Jack Kolb explains the components of a HACH kit, used to test the tank water for oxygen and Ph levels.

Byrnes student Mandi Cothran, her mother Donna Davidson and FFA advisor G. P. Jones discuss procedures before the cattle show.

West-Oak's Elizabeth Burdette, 1991 South Carolina Junior Polled Hereford Queen, competed in several classes and assisted in the awards ceremonies.

State Fair Attracts Best In FFA Livestock Students

The South Carolina State Fair attracted students showing their livestock from FFA chapters at Crescent, James F. Byrnes, Wagener-Salley and West-Oak high schools. Both cattle and sheep competition brought students to Columbia in October for the week-long events, along with their FFA advisors and, for many, their families.

Crescent's Tanya Simpson gets some help from her father Steve in walking her hereford.

Crescent FFA advisor John Herron does a little pre-show clipping.

In spite of the constant work involved in livestock shows, Crescent's Meredith McGee and father Joe enjoy them.

Young Farmer John Taylor of Taylors Tree Farm, Chester, sprays his Virginia pines with green paint. The November maintenance is required on the Christmas trees because South Carolina warm winters tend to turn them yellow.

Blackstock Chapter Has Successful Auction

The Blackstock Young Farmers held a November auction that raised $1,500 that will be used in restoring the old Blackstock High School. The chapter, which meets in the building, replaced the roof last year and plans to use the auction proceeds to replace the wiring and windows.

Advisor Tommy Gladden reports that a variety of farm equipment and household goods were donated by members and Chester area residents. A local auctioneer from Brown and Mattox presided and buyers came from all parts of state to the November 2 auction.

McKee, Pitts Get Awards At Hickory Tavern

Two local Young Farmer Awards and a video of the 64th National FFA Convention highlighted the Hickory Tavern November 21 meeting. With help from Laurens chapter members Scott Ness, J. J. Meier and Jon Phillips, advisor Stewart Glenn and fellow members put together a steak supper for the meeting conducted by president Keith Hodges.

Carlton Pitts receives the chapter electrification award from advisor Stewart Glenn.

Billy McKee receives the chapter NAPA Shop Award from Nellie Wells at the November meeting.
